CLINICAL SUMMARY

During my career, I spent 21 years of intense cardiothoracic anesthesiology faculty clinical practice (20% overall clinical effort plus night/weekend call) at Duke University Medical Center. This was followed by 5 years of general anesthesiology practice at Puget Sound Veterans' Administration (VA) Hospital (25% overall effort), Harborview Medical Center (a major trauma center), and the University of Washington Medical Center. As Dean of UI CCOM and Associate VPMA at the University of Iowa, I practiced general anesthesiology 2 half-days each month at UIHC (general O.R.) and have privileges at Iowa City VA Hospital. In recent months, I have returned to more regular (several days/week) clinical practice along with my other duties.

RESEARCH SUMMARY

It is my firm belief that excellence in research transcends department and college boundaries. The unifying theme of my personal research is mechanisms underlying the stress response, with studies ranging from basic science to clinical (where the operating room is a model of robust reproducible stress). I have been continuously funded by the NIH and other organizations for 27 years. My early national prominence in research was best evidenced by election as a member of the National Academy of Medicine at age 45. I have served on four editorial boards. In addition, I have over twenty years of continuous study section experience including most recently as Co-Chair of the Review Committee of the NIH Transformative R01 Award. I have served as a NIH NIGMS Advisory Council member.

BASIC RESEARCH: My NIH-funded (1989-2016) laboratory-based research focuses predominantly on α_1 -adrenergic receptor (α_1 AR) regulation. After cloning cDNAs encoding novel α_1 AR subtypes, characterizing encoded proteins pharmacologically, ascertaining species-specific tissue distribution, my laboratory then turned to investigating mechanisms underlying regulation of the human α_{1a} AR itself. This has included examining gene regions important in transcriptional regulation, specific receptor amino acids and kinases involved in agonist-induced α_{1a} AR desensitization, as well as dissecting signaling pathways with the help of microarray and proteomics approaches. We have elucidated novel constitutive cycling of the human α_{1a} AR, examined the role of lipid rafts in α_{1a} AR signaling, studied transcriptional regulation of cascades of stress-induced genes, and most recently focused on naturally occurring genetic variability in human α_{1a} ARs and resultant biologic consequences. Our research has implications for understanding mechanisms underlying human cardiovascular disease and even prostate disease. Most recently, my NIH-funded laboratory operated on the South Lake Union campus at the University of Washington, Seattle through April 2016.

TRANSLATIONAL & CLINICAL RESEARCH: I have completed clinical research trials as well. Historically this included studies designed to understand mechanisms underlying acute myocardial β AR desensitization during heart surgery. More recently perioperative genomics has been the research focus with a team of statistical geneticists, anesthesiology, surgery, and intensive care faculty examining the role of genetic variability on perioperative outcomes. Indeed, for 2 years I was Program Director for Cardiovascular Genomics in Duke's Institute of Genome Sciences & Policy, a University-wide institute. Taken together, our laboratory and clinical research has indeed transcended medical discipline, shedding light on mechanisms underlying acute and chronic stress responses.

RESEARCH LEADERSHIP: As a member of the National Academy of Medicine since 2002, an experienced scientific journal editorial board member, and 20 years of continuous study section experience (including most recently as Co-Chair of the Review Committee for NIH Transformative R01 Awards), I have had an opportunity to view biomedical research from many leadership perspectives. From 2007 to 2012, while Professor and Chair in the Department of Anesthesiology & Pain Medicine at the University of Washington School of Medicine, my laboratory-based basic science studies continued while I led the department's research training grant, and moved the department from #22 in NIH funding to top 5 in NIH funding in 5 years. Then from 2012-2016, as Dean of the University of Iowa Roy J & Lucille A Carver College of Medicine, my own basic science laboratory continued operating at the University of Washington South Lake Union campus. At Iowa, NIH funding stabilized and then increased by $13.8M in the first half of FY16 (first increase since 2008). New UI research buildings included the opening of the Pappajohn Biomedical Research Institute building (2015), new vivarium on the main CCOM campus and renovation of the Oakdale campus university vivarium (slated 2017). In 2016, a total of 532,057 nsf research space exists in UI CCOM, with a further 51,000 nsf anticipated once vivarium projects are completed.

EDUCATION SUMMARY

Education is an integral part of a professor's life. I have presented formal lectures to Duke and University of Washington School of Medicine students and graduate students, participated in small group problem-based learning sessions in medical pharmacology (1st year medical students) and directed the entire 3rd year curriculum (research year) at Duke Medical School (2001-2005; n=100 students per year). I also have worked one-on-one with undergraduates, medical students and graduate students in my laboratory (Duke, UW), as well as with anesthesiology residents and senior cardiac anesthesiology fellows in the operating room (Duke, UW, UI). In 2003-2005 I was part of the planning team organizing the start of a new Duke-sponsored graduate medical school for Southeast Asia, based in Singapore. In addition, I have lectured in many departments and institutions across the United States and internationally and have trained basic science postdoctoral fellows and physician scientists in my laboratory. These activities continued at the University of Washington from 2007-2012 and intermittently at the University of Iowa 2012-present. Over the last decade, I have enjoyed creating new faculty/fellowships designed to enhance academic depth and create leaders in a fiscally sustainable way. In terms of passing on knowledge to the next generation, I am most proud that many of my students have won research prizes and gone on to have successful academic careers themselves.
